Swiss research institutions can be instrumentalised

Home /EU-No-Newsletter, News/Swiss research institutions can be instrumentalised

EU-No-Newsletter, News | 16 January 2020

Colleges and universities are not immune to fake news either. They are clearly committed to a framework agreement. The alleged reason: because, according to their own statements, research cooperation with the EU would be endangered without a framework agreement. However, this has now turned out to be wrong. Unfortunately, these Swiss research institutions have not revised their position on the Framework Agreement. This shows that they are deliberately allowing themselves to be politically instrumentalised.

One of the main arguments of the proponents of the Framework Agreement is falling apart like a house of cards. Time and again it has been claimed that research cooperation with the EU is dependent on the Framework Agreement. This fake news has now been refuted. Nonetheless, our Swiss colleges and universities have let themselves be carried away into real battle slogans for the Framework Agreement. As early as 2018, the Association of Swiss Universities, SwissUniversities, issued the following statement: "The Rectors' Conference of the Swiss Universities is therefore advocating an institutional framework agreement between Switzerland and the European Union". In 2019, in the course of the Federal Council's consultation on the framework agreement, the ETH Board added: "The ETH Board is committed to a framework agreement between Switzerland and the EU.

Of course, the question generally arises here as to why universities, and especially the ETH as a federal institution, make political statements that are not within their competence. But what is blatant is the fact that the statements are simply wrong, that research cooperation depends on the framework agreement. As a result, many liberals and entrepreneurs also find their arguments under pressure. This is quite simply because it is fact-free.

Research bureaucrats' Facts News

Since the end of 2019 at the latest, it has been clear that the EU prefers Switzerland's money to institutional integration. In an interview with SRF, EU Commissioner Johannes Hahn, who is not known for his frank statements, confirmed that for the EU, future research cooperation between Switzerland and the EU does not depend on the Framework Agreement:

SRF: You can confirm that the Research Association has nothing to do with the Framework Agreement?

Hahn: Yeah. In any case, I can say on behalf of the Commission that we have a great interest in ensuring that Swiss researchers also participate in our programmes in the future.

The EU is apparently in financial difficulties and has noticed that the best university locations in Europe are no longer to be found in the EU at the latest after the brexite. It is said by name that Switzerland, Great Britain and, for example, also Israel benefit most from the funding pools. This is because they are better than the others. This is also repeatedly confirmed by global university and innovation rankings. The best locations in Europe are in Switzerland and the UK. This is where the EU has an interest in not losing these two countries as partners.

No regrets, no apologies

The Rectors' Conference of the Swiss Universities and the ETH Board should now finally revise their position on the Framework Agreement and communicate it publicly. They should apologise for their blunt and hasty political slogan in favour of the Framework Agreement. Otherwise it will become obvious that they are being politically exploited here, either by the economic functionaries and managers of the large economic associations, or from abroad, i.e. from the EU. Both would be reprehensible to our supposedly free universities and researchers.

Extract from the official 728th contact meeting of 30 November 2019

Ptaah Of course you can ask.

Billy We have already talked several times about the Bermuda Triangle, where I was with your father Sfath and he explained various things to me, including the methane gases on the sea floor, which dissolve, rush upwards and dilute the water and air to such an extent that even large ships disappear into the sea and even airplanes suddenly crash. Ships and airplanes are then also driven very far away by the currents and can no longer be found, or only with difficulty. Ships are also sunk by huge monster waves, as I saw one that Sfath had measured with almost 42 meters height. In addition, in that huge area from the earth's interior magnetic storms occur here and there, as Sfath explained, which are fatal for airplanes in particular. That is one thing, because there are other occurrences that occur in the Bermuda region, but also in other places, such as in the Japanese New World.

The Dragon's Triangle, an area in the Pacific Ocean about 100 km south of Tokyo near Miyake Island. What happens there and in the Bermuda Triangle, also happens in other places in the Atlantic and Pacific, but also the Indian Ocean and other places where ships disappear without a trace, which currently is about two ships per week, as some statistics show. However, it is not always natural phenomena that drag ships into the depths of the sea, but often it is also insurance fraud or other criminal activities. But I am also aware, as Sfath told me, that in the various strange places where ships and airplanes are disappearing in strange ways, the events are of completely natural origin - with one exception, which I will keep quiet about, as well as about the other phenomena by which ships and airplanes disappear without a trace. Your father Sfath has shown me some phenomena in this respect, besides enormous gigantic mega waves and methane gas explosions, which blew up very high explosion fountains over the water surface. But now I ask myself, because the following internet excerpt was sent to me, whether I should remain silent about the fact, even in the present time, which other phenomena, unknown to earthly scientists, still exist, which are still present in the Bermuda Triangle and in other places, as in general over and in the seas, the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans etc. ships and planes and make them disappear. What do you think?

Ptaah There is probably nothing against saying something about what knowledge my father has imparted to you, this also with regard to the phenomena, which you have mentioned and which are still unknown to the earthly scientists, but which I myself could also observe, because I am also interested in the events, which appear so mysterious to the earth people, but are absolutely natural.

Billy Well, then I can say something, even if antagonists, know-it-alls, troublemakers, scientists, researchers and other negators of some kind run amok against me and my presentation. Then I want to say that I have seen many phenomena in the pear ship of your father Sfath, which are actually not recognizable by the naked eye, but can only be made visible on screens by electronic means. That was for example far out at the edge of our solar system, but also on SOL-planets and their moons, but also on and around the earth, when Sfath let me watch the solar winds etc. Well, what I want to say now, however, is the fact that in the Bermuda Triangle and also elsewhere in areas of the world's oceans gigantic shock underwater storms and shock overwater storms are taking place, which cannot be recognized without highly sensitive electronic equipment and can only be made visible on monitors equipped for this purpose. One of these phenomena, which I will simply describe as an underwater shock storm, is that gigantic shock waves race through the depths of the oceans at hundreds of kilometres per hour and affect everything that comes into their range like gigantic hammer blows. If ships are hit by them, no matter how small, large or powerful, the shock wave forces acting on them cause demolitions and let the ships sink within seconds or minutes, whereby they are also carried away by the enormously gigantic shock wave forces, only to disappear somewhere in the sea forever. These shockwaves, Sfath explained, are caused by two different phenomena, either by magnetic storms within Ireland and deep inside the planet, which act outwards and thus into the oceans and the atmosphere. And with that on the other hand it can also be explained that over the oceans shock wave storms also occur, which race through the atmosphere with a speed of hundreds of kilometers per hour, can be many kilometers high and therefore also simply tear up, hurl away and crash airplanes, which are never found again. But that is not all, because a further emergence of such shock waves results from seaquakes, but also from earthquakes as well as from irresponsible machinations of mankind, and that by dropping bombs in wars and their as well as by other powerful explosions the earth is shaken deep into its interior, whereby shock waves are caused in the seas and fresh waters. In the same way, the same thing happens with all enormous explosions, such as those in mining, earth resources extraction, tunnel construction and other irresponsible planet-shaking and disastrous machinations of the earthlings, who have no idea what kind of pla-netary effects their violent actions have. All geological scientists have only a big mouth and make themselves important in public with stupid banal sayings and pseudo explanations, but they truly know nothing of all that is really happening on the planet. Nor do they have any idea what kind of all-destroying, tremendous, criminal and irresponsible damage and destruction has been done to the planet to satisfy the needs of the Earth's overpopulation. And these monstrous earthlings' machinations...

The development of the overpopulation continues undiminished and destroys the planet earth more and more, because the overpopulation is still rampant in its growth, as well as the whole economic commerce connected with it and aimed at boundless profit, which is doing everything to slowly but surely destroy all possibilities of life and existence on earth completely in order to provide for the more and more exuberant needs of the rampant overpopulation. In addition to all this, in relation to the increase in the mass of overpopulation, people are becoming more and more unfeeling and indifferent to each other, more and more hostile, unconnected, malicious and degenerating, as well as more insensitive, psychologically unstable and sick and unable to live.

What I want to say now, that refers to what I learned from Sfath, namely that even scientists somehow rummage around behind the moon and don't deal with what would actually be fundamentally important. Although they have fields of science such as entomology or entomology, plant biology, domestic animals, wild animals as well as birds, poultry etc., on the one hand they lack the knowledge that everything has to be specified according to its genus and species and thus, for example, animals are only mammalian creatures that have nothing to do with birds, animals or insects, just as these have nothing to do with bees etc. So this, while on the other hand, it has not yet been understood and researched that all forms of life are sentient and therefore also have psychic impulses, just like humans as self-conscious individuals. It is admittedly assumed today that higher animals, that is, mammals, have psychic impulses, but this is precisely the whole wisdom of the natural and biological sciences. But that all living beings as a whole have a psychic form, such as an instinctive psyche, a sentient or energy psyche, which is also peculiar to lower beings like beetles and insects, creatures of all kinds, werren, lizards, snakes, fish and butterflies and moths, etc. - which, moreover, are neither animals nor creatures, but their own genera and species, and so are to be called such - is something of which scientists have no idea at all. Nor do they know that even the lowest living beings communicate intensively with one another. In the same way, this scientific ignorance also applies to the entire biodiversity or the manifold width and breadth of the entire plant world, because in this respect, too, the corresponding scientists have no idea that every single plant - from the tiniest moss thread to the giant tree - on the one hand has a psychic form, an energy psyche etc. as Sfath has described and explained it. On the other hand the plants and living beings communicate with each other very intensively, but as they all have a sense of pain, every single plant and every independent living being from the smallest to the largest genus and species. I was able to observe and experience this myself on plants and even insects, when Sfath experimentally let me see pain vibrations of plants and the smallest living beings on devices and monitors, and through an apparatus connected to my head, I was able to perceive them nervously and effectively feel and listen to them. I was also able to effectively hear the pain sounds of various plants through the apparatus on my head, such as, depending on how I was allowed to put it into my words, a whimper, a short outcry, a groan, a longer lasting whisper of pain, a lament, moaning, crying, lamenting, but I could also hear sadness, agony and sobbing.

Dear friend, the fact is that without overpopulation, all the enormous problems on earth, all the destruction, devastation and extermination of nature, its fauna and flora, as well as all the impairment and destruction of all ecosystems around the world, all the hatred and the depravity of all human beings would never have come about. This, just as it would never have come about that a certain majority of the earthlings are literally bred into murderous combat machines by the military, secret services, special task forces, terrorist organizations and security services, etc., just as it is the case with child soldiers and child terrorists, who then murder masses of people as unscrupulous killers.

Basically it is so on earth that since the origin of the earthlings murder and manslaughter, war and terror prevail, whereby deeply a religious delusion unconscious to humans causes them to degenerate underground. And this is effectively founded in all religious sectarian falsehoods and lies, which on the one hand preach love, peace and freedom, but on the other hand begging God for helpful help and victory when wars are fought. Even when it is about to harass other neighbours or other fellow human beings, to drive them away, to make them impossible through lies and slander, sectarian faith always comes to the fore subliminally and unconsciously and somehow leads to violence - often up to murder and manslaughter. Although lyingly written in the <Holy> books and writings and declared by the believers' captors to be love and peace, this is immediately revoked by saying that God should assist in the struggle and ensure victory. So if the following is preached: <Go and practice love, peace and harmony, then the sectarian delusional belief in God already contains the demand <Go, and if your neighbor does not want to be your brother, then smash his skull in.

Today, as a result of various relationships, enormous social divisions are also on the agenda, causing feuds, strife and quarrels and even malicious violence, whether through hatred of foreigners, religion or race, left or right-wing extremism, envy of wealth, distrust or hatred of refugees, which was created in many Europeans by the refugee crisis, which as a result of the stupid stupidity of the German Chancellor Merkel with her absolutely idiotic refugee welcome culture has caused a lot of trouble, which has so far cost the lives of tens of thousands of refugees. But that is not all, because there is also an enormous mistrust among people today, as well as a serious lack of education, not only among young people, but in general. This is because digitalism - which is not controlled, because it came up much too early - is not - the earthlings have not been learning for a long time now, but only fiddle around with their apps etc. and consequently no longer try to make something better out of themselves.

If everything is looked at closely, then it is recognized that all the most diverse criminal organizations and world wars, international wars and civil wars, as well as all religious-sectarian and political terror organizations and all kinds of enormous human degenerations, such as these have been rampant since the year 1700 in an ever more degenerate way in the whole of mankind on earth, without the inexorably growing mass of earthlings would never have come about. Of course, the earthlings have already clashed again and again before through enormous wars, tortures and evil, brutal and murderous violence, and have slaughtered, murdered, robbed, cheated and bashed each other's skulls, but never in the framework and in those tremendous forms that were created by the rampant mass of mankind and have become more and more insane. The more the earthlings began to populate the world, the more and more degenerated everything became, also in regard to the belief in God, which already made the Italian navigator and adventurer Cristoforo Colombo and Christopher Columbus a mass murderer, when he was in Castilian service and searched for the sea route to India, but then in 1492 he reached an island of the Ba-hamas. There he was murdered several times by Caribbean inhabitants who called their island Guanahani, because he wanted to change the faith of the egg-born to the Christian faith, but they refused, so he killed several inhabitants of the island with his own hands, as his crew did. This fact, however, was concealed and has not become known until today.

Like Columbus, the Spanish soldiers, explorers, adventurers and conquerors, the Conquistadors, did the same, taking possession of large parts of North, Central and South America as well as the Philippines and other islands as Spanish colonies during the 16th and 17th centuries. And as is usual with conquests, thousands of murders were committed against the natives. On the one hand, this was also due to the delusional belief of the invaders in God, because everything always had to be done in the name of God, but on the other hand, it was out of greed for gold, which the natives forged in tons for their god cults to give to God. The Spanish conquistadors stole this gold from the natives, who were also slaughtered en masse by the conquerors. As Sfath explained, the conquistadors alone stole a total of more than 250 tons of gold from the Aztecs, Incas and Maya, enriching themselves enormously on the one hand and bringing enormous wealth to the Spanish crown on the other.

The empires of the Aztecs, Maya and Incas conquered by the Spanish conquistadors counted, according to your father Sfath, at that time all together as a large population of about 38 million people, and of these, the conquistadors or the Spanish adventurers and conquistadors counting only ship crews were usually a large majority of 5000 to 12 000 Aztec, Maya and Inca Indians. However, all these Indian peoples underestimated the superiority of the Spanish murderous invaders, who were trained in tactical-strategic conquest and modern combat tactics, which they had also used against the occupying forces from North Africa and the Moors. As a result, the conquerors had a great superiority over the weakly armed Indians, despite small crews on board. They had practically no chance against the modern weapons of the conquistadors, so it was no disadvantage for them that they were often in a minority compared to the thousands of locals.

The war experience and the superiority of the Spanish conquistadors made the Aztecs, Mayas and Incas practically helpless against the conquerors, consequently their vast majority of warriors equipped with primitive weapons was of no use to them, and the large number of available warriors simply made it impossible to defend themselves. In all their inexperience with regard to the modern weapons and equipment of the foreign Spanish invaders, which were actually tiny troops against the many thousands of Indians, the natives could not properly assess their great danger. The missing knowledge and the lack of knowledge regarding the cultural background of the Spanish conquistadors as well as their effective intentions, efforts, thoughts, plans, intentions and will as well as their commitment to their religious sectarian Christian delusional belief in God, made it almost impossible for the Indian tribes and their rulers to take proper action against the battle-tested foreign conquests.

to react. Their belief to see in every natural event terrible omens of their gods often paralyzed them and also caused that they had no chance to defend themselves despite their many thousands of fighters. The empires of the Incas, Mayas and the Aztecs had been built up by wars of conquest, but their weapons and art of warfare were practically ridiculous compared to the Spanish conquistadors who were trained and equipped with modern weapons. The peoples conquered by the Aztecs, Mayas and Incas had to pay tribute to the Indian conquerors, but still they were not integrated into the empires of their conquerors. In the great empires lived nevertheless many different peoples, following that also many different languages and religions prevailed, whereby however, except the Inca empire, the empires of the Aztecs and the Maya did not have a uniform government administration, as Sfath explained. These empires were relatively unstable, because there was no uniform jurisdiction and no uniform legislation. There were also no standing armies to control and constantly occupy subjugated peoples and their territories. The conquistadors took advantage of the dissatisfaction of the subjugated peoples and were able to influence them in such a way that they allied themselves with the conquerors and set off against the rulers and populations of the empires, which finally led to a collapse of the native populations, Spain claimed total dominion and called the conquered territories New Spain.

Between 1400 and 1600, the Spanish conquerors brought to the empires of the Aztecs, Incas and Mayas various diseases from Europe, especially venereal diseases such as syphilis, etc., but also smallpox, which quickly proved fatal for the natives, thus decimating the peoples in this way as well as through famine. According to Sfath, who was once active in those great empires, the Aztecs, Mayas and Incas lost more than 2/3 of their population through the direct and indirect fault of the conquistadors. Sfath said that at that time, as a result of the missionary zeal of the Spanish Conquistadors for Christ, whole peoples were deprived of their cultural identity, their honour and dignity, their existence, their possessions and cohesion within a few weeks, by murderous and brutal robbery, rape of women and children and other sordid activities.

What happened through the atrocities committed by the Spanish conquistadors against the Aztecs, Incas and Mayas, also happened in Europe, but in a different way, namely through the persecution of witches, which took place mainly in the early modern times, from 1450 to 1750, and many other inhumanities and problems of all kinds have always been caused, up to the destruction, extermination and extermination of many living creatures in nature and their fauna and flora. And in all of this, since time immemorial there has always been some kind of religious sectarian madness, some kind of delusional belief in God. Already since old times the believers were mad and delusional and had to be left in their faith and left alone because otherwise they killed all those who said something against their delusion. So every human being has always, as a result of his belief in God, always put his own stupidity and skin on the market and in this way determined his personal fate. But let us leave all this, for on the one hand all kinds and events of human atrocities cannot be enumerated in their mass, and what I say will in any case stimulate neither the intellect nor the reason of the great mass of the earthlings, for the plague of irrationality of reason is spreading everywhere and up to the highest circles of the governments and scientists, researchers and all other loudmouths in such a way that every word that is full of understanding and reason is for all of them in their stupidity and idiocy nothing more than a breath of nothingness. So you better read this double article, which was probably taken from the internet somewhere.

Ptaah You will be right about that, because your words will remain soundless.

Psychopaths and <weak-minded people> in politics?

Published on February 22, 2015 by helmut mueller

Psychopathes et malades mentaux en politique? Psychopaths and mentally deranged persons in politics?

The Italian psychoanalyst Piero Rocchini claims in his book "Neurosis of Power" that more than half of the politicians are seriously psychologically ill, belong in institutions and should under no circumstances be allowed to determine the fate of a country. This is a serious accusation, although it is mainly directed at Italian politicians. But is there really so much of it here in more northern Europe?

A similarly fatal verdict, this one about US "liberals", meaning do-gooders, who are often found in politics, was made by the US psychiatrist Lyle Rossiter. He assumes that the public display of do-gooderism can only be understood as a psychological illness. If someone today can agree with Rossiter and Rocchini without much thought, then it should not surprise you if many citizens take psychopathological behaviour and self-induced madness among politicians for granted.

More and more bizarre and crazy speeches and irresponsible, even dangerous political actions, almost do not allow any other conclusion. Just think of the gigantic redistribution of our assets from the bottom to the top and then on to bankrupt states and banks. Or the statements of misguided green politicians, who consider German citizenship a thorn in their side and would like to see it abolished. Because of the "historical guilt". Also the profitable CO₂ lie of many politicians as well as the gender mania of some female politicians belong in this crazy drawer. So for some concerned people the question arises, does one already enter politics as a psychopath or <weak-minded person> or will one become one only there? And is this a prerequisite for very high consecration?

But now I would like to point out that, in addition to the cases mentioned here, there is also the possibility of a mysterious brain-organic disease which only becomes apparent after decades and which manifests itself through increasing confusion and forgetfulness. Not only among top European politicians. One might be suspicious in this respect in the case of the US Secretary of State, John Kerry, who said that it is not as easy to invade another country today as it was in the 19th century. To his great astonishment, however, global applause has failed to materialize.

If Kerry should not (anymore) know how often and where everywhere his country invaded also in this century, ruined millions of dead, injured and displaced persons on their consciences and more than half a dozen countries, then he has a real problem. And the world with him. However, and this is no consolation, in his case there is also the possibility of a deliberately employed hypocritical indignation of a cynic who seems <spiritually> healthy, but is ice-cold. Nevertheless, even such a behaviour would at least allow the question of Kerry's <spiritual>-moral constitution to be asked. Which, by the way, evokes memories of the self-proclaimed savior George W. Bush.

But then what about Mrs. Merkel, who is being bugged by the secret services around the clock, who doesn't look like the type of person to be bugged, but who nevertheless claims, as <mentally lost>, that Islam belongs to Germany. Now one could ignore her bold assertion by attributing it to enormous work overload, which can sometimes also have consequences in the area of inner life. If this were the case, however, horrifying images would immediately come to mind. Finally: What could the presumed chancellor of the US occupying power in a physical and mental state of emergency not have given, signed or promised everything already?

Hopefully it will not be like that, but then it would soon be time for Mrs. Merkel, who is obviously overtaxed in German-national affairs, to at least explain to her Germans how she meant Islam. But apart from that, she would be well advised to spend a little less time on travel diplomacy on behalf of NATO, but more time on the worries and needs of her people, who think differently about Islam. A time-out for <spiritual> (conscious) reflection and physical recovery would be highly recommended to her. But this is not to be expected voluntarily from those who are possessed, especially if they are once at the mercy of "archetypal constraints" (P. Rocchini).

Then there is still something like collective insanity in the German political arena. For example when anti-Germans fighting against German identity and culture are supported by a part of the ruling class with tax money. This is true madness, but still somehow "harmless" compared to the suicidally designed immigration and population policy. Not only in Germany by the way, but in this EU in general. As far as this and other behaviour bordering on idiocy is concerned, don't those political leaders obviously affected by an evil <spirit> deserve to be put in a straitjacket in time?

But finally, as far as the <spiritual> constitution of high Austrian politics is concerned, there is absolutely also reason for concern. <Spiritual flights of fancy of a healthy kind and political responsibility are hardly to be heard the further up one goes. But at least to many people at one time something that seems to be so, then extremely strange and lastingly disturbing. For example, from the mouth of the streamlined Foreign Minister actor Kurz. He seriously believes that those who support the annexation of South Tyrol to the Fatherland Austria or the Free State of South Tyrol are "eternally yesterday's people". So, according to a survey, also more than 70% of Italians who speak out for self-determination. Therefore the question arises: Is the young man actually completely dense?

How easily Austrian politicians can be suspected of being <spiritually> (consciously) overtaxed was also shown in a "News" interview in which the over-promising liberal opposition leader was confronted with the question: "For you, feeding on light is nothing? Strache: "No, I am a very pleasurable person who likes to eat something material." (And this is not too little, note) "But", says Strache, "I have seen a great video about a monk who died a hundred years ago, who is a mummified figure and whose eyes move should. These are interesting phenomena, which often cannot be explained and which should be critically examined." Hopefully not by means of a parliamentary question.

But even before such a Kakanian probability occurs, which could cause global amusement, a natural science educated person should have informed the politician about the "interesting phenomenon". And at some point, I think, not only in Austrian and federal politics, but especially also on the EU level, a higher <spiritual level and a little more common sense should be achieved. So that one day we don't find ourselves together with "our" politicians for the amusement of the world in a chaotic cage of fools, which once was called Europe and was a model for others for a long time.

PS. Of course, there is no such thing as the most perfect politician. But the most perfect fool does. But even small editions of the same do not come off worst in the happiness award. And so it happens that some politicians are allowed to pocket a multiple of what they would have earned as a college dropout, average employee or bankruptcy-prone small business owner.

Optimal LIFE? Withdrawal from media!

What makes us tick when we are not in control of ourselves ... <https://kenfm.de/tagesdosis-11-1-2020-die-welt-im-rausch-von-kriegen-krisen-und-drohkulissen-podcast/>

(When the media pass on one piece of bad news to the next, they manipulate our subconsciousness and thus influence our psyche and our physical reactions. When we get used to the "addictive" adrenaline, which is triggered by great stress, among other things, we are suddenly, without realizing it, addicted to "drama", conflict, information about war and terror. Without consciously perceiving it, we become addicted to aggression discharge. Then we suddenly shout "We are for humanitarian war", although we had actually shouted "Never again war" before.

So we're even hungry for the information that scares us. This is a fatal development. We believe the generated enemy images and no longer listen to our hearts. Someone who is afraid gets into such a state of shock that he either flees or attacks. This can manifest itself, for example, in such a way that one is either not interested in politics at all or becomes so angry that any image of the enemy is right to attack from within and carry the war that others want.

Dare the media withdrawal

It is therefore essential to give up addiction, or rather to create moments of calm in order to get out of the drama of the psyche, physical stress and media manipulation. After all, we cannot separate the information in the media from the effects they have on our psyche. It would be like separating the rain from the clouds.

Creating moments of silence to come back to yourself and think clearly is not necessarily a spiritual thing. There are now numerous studies on the effects of meditation on the brain and on human health. It also prevents the person from acting solely out of fear reactions and thus behaving like an addict or like a child blindly following the ball that rolls onto the busy road. These behaviours are quite unhealthy. (...)

Self-destruction of the Germans? - How Germany against Russia and China

hwiludwigPublished on 15 January 2020

This spring, the USA is planning its biggest manoeuvres on European soil since the end of the Cold War. 20,000 US soldiers are to be sent to Europe in April and May and transported via Belgium and the Netherlands by rail and inland waterway across Germany to Poland and to the eastern flank of NATO to 17,000 NATO troops already stationed there. Germany would be the logistical hub.¹ - An aggressive provocation against Russia, which could easily lead to another war in the EU, would not be a problem.

ropa can trigger. Should Germany be finally destroyed after two world wars? Angelika Eberl shows the following connections.

A guest article by Angelika Eberl

"The leading personalities are working on the destruction of Europe; as a part of their "peace work", these leading personalities are devising something from which measures can be derived which will lead to the complete mental self-destruction of the German people in addition to the economic destruction. 1a
Rudolf Steiner

The leading personalities of the victorious powers of the First World War ensured that Germany was held solely responsible for the First World War in the Versailles dictatorship. This resulted in further measures leading to the destruction of Germany, as described in the previous article. But the process of Germany's destruction is apparently not yet over - one can observe much more that it is actually changing into a process of self-destruction.

Keynote address by the Minister of Defence

On November 7, 2019 - two days before the "date of fate" of the Germans - the German Minister of Defence Annegret Kramp-Karrenbauer gave a keynote speech at the Bundeswehr University in Munich. She spoke of the "Russian aggression" in the Ukraine and the "annexation of the Crimea", global terrorism and the "rise of China's power politics", which was accompanied by a "claim to power". She said:

"There is broad agreement that Germany must become more active in the face of strategic challenges. [...] A country of our size and our economic and technological strength, a country in our geostrategic position and with our global interests, cannot simply stand on the sidelines and watch. Not simply wait and see whether others act, and then more or less resolutely join in, or not join in. [...] Our partners in the Indo-Pacific region - first and foremost Australia, Japan and South Korea, but also India - feel increasingly oppressed by Chi-nas' claim to power. They want a clear sign of solidarity. [...] We are the trading nation that lives by international reliability. Besides China, we are a leader in international container shipping - and we are looking forward to free and peaceful Sea routes instructed. [...] Because of course Germany, like every country in the world, has its own strategic interests, for example as a globally networked trading nation in the heart of Europe." 2

The "broad agreement" claimed in this extract does not exist. Recent surveys show that the vast majority of Germans do not want Bundeswehr missions abroad.³ But what the population wants obviously does not matter. She then appealed to a guilty conscience: "Our partners wanted a clear sign of solidarity. This is stupid, because there is no military alliance with Australia, Japan, South Korea and India. These countries are trading partners but not military allies. China is also our trading partner. But by saying that Germany "naturally has its own strategic interests", she lets the cat out of the bag. This is a blunt statement that war is permissible as a means of enforcing "interests", i.e. trade interests or other "interests". But this is not the case, because the UN ban on violence clearly states that international conflicts must be solved without violence. In addition, the German constitution demands that the Federal Republic of Germany must make a contribution to peace in the world.

If one considers that in 2003 there had been "the biggest demonstration of all times" against the Iraq war, in which "millions of people... took to the streets", as the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung wrote at the time⁴, then this speech by Ms. Kramp-Karrenbauer represents a further breach of the dam for the goals of the transatlantic hawks, because at last, after so many years of tireless indoctrination, they have brought some political decision-makers in Germany to the point where they are prepared to send German ground troops to far-flung foreign missions in future wars, "in which killing and dying will take place", as a moderator said on 24th January.10.2019 in a television broadcast. After all, the CDU politician honestly said "what everyone thinks when they say that Germany should take on more responsibility in the world. 5

Kramp-Karrenbauer's advance does not come out of the blue. Transatlantic circles and their media have been working on the peace-loving German people for decades to gradually make them ready for foreign missions.

Decades of treatment of the German people

On the occasion of the Second Gulf War in 1990 there were fierce protests and demonstrations in Germany. On January 28, 1991, Der Spiegel published an article entitled "Never again be a perpetrator": "When he finally spoke out on the war in the Gulf last Wednesday, it was a first beating for the peace friends on Germany's streets: According to Kohl, he is dismayed by 'the moral indifference, the blatant distortion of facts and the deliberate whipping up of emotions' in some marchers. ... But because the campers settle in front of American consulates, because 'No blood for oil' is repeatedly chanted and 'Americans out of Saudi Arabia', Israelis, Americans and British are disturbed: 'Many, especially the young, do not see the parallels between the German attack on Po-len in 1939 and the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait 1990", the Financial Times complained. 6

There is no question that Iraq's dictator Saddam Hussein was the aggressor at the time. Nevertheless, the prehistory deserves attention: Hussein had previously complained that Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates had not adhered to the agreed OPEC production quotas, causing Iraq to lose billions. Kuwait would also drill into Iraqi oil fields diagonally below its national border. Iraq's President Hussein told US Ambassador April Glaspie on 25 July 1990 that it was unacceptable that Kuwait kept the price of oil low and expanded its territory at Iraq's expense. Glaspie replied: "... We have no opinion on the inner-Arab conflicts, such as the border conflict with Kuwait... We hope that you will be able to resolve the problem by the means you consider appropriate. Ramsey Clark, the former US Secretary of Justice under President Johnson, believes that Glaspie had thus set a trap for the Iraqi dictator.7

The widespread resistance at that time shows that many Germans - although they cannot understand the circumstances-ten - still had the right feeling that this was primarily about oil and imperial power interests.

Nevertheless, Wolf Biermann saw himself compelled to give these friends of peace the opportunity to publish an article in the DIE ZEIT newspaper from 1 Februar 1991: "To misunderstand each other: I'm for this war in the Gulf." 8

Eight years later, on the evening of 24 March 1999, the ordinary war of aggression, contrary to international law, began, of NATO on Serbia - and Germany was there. The then Federal Chancellor Gerhard Schröder, who Green Foreign Minister Josef Fischer, the new Defence Minister Rudolf Scharping, the departing Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel (FDP) and also the outgoing Defence Minister Volker Rühle CDU spoke out in favour of participation in the war and sold them, using phrases and lies, as "humanitarian" mission. The German mass media supported this with mendacious war propaganda, as the WDR documentary film entitled: "It began with a lie" shows. 9 Germany had become the uncritical agent of imperialist US policy.

This was like the removal of an effective barrier. Two years later, after the attacks of 11 September 2001, then US President George W. Bush proclaimed the NATO alliance case and called for a foreign deployment of the allies in Afghanistan. The attack on Afghanistan from 7 October 2001 was an illegal war of aggression without a UN mandate.

But when it was to go again in 2003 under a pretext against Saddam Hussein, resistance arose in Germany. The Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung published an article on February 16, 2003: "The biggest demonstration ever."

"World Day of Protest: Millions of people took to the streets on Saturday to protest against a war in Iraq. The Berlin rally became the largest peace demonstration in the history of the Federal Republic." 10

The German government under Gerhard Schröder did not take part in this war against Iraq at that time. But the then opposition politician Dr. Angela Merkel firmly rejected this "going it alone" and referred to the sermon of the Protestant Bishop Wolfgang Huber in the Berlin Cathedral on September 11, 2002 - and this sermon was a tough one. It has an effect when on a highly traumatic date, like September 11, a bishop uses the words of the Sermon on the Mount in a sermon. He said that the words "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called sons and daughters of God" are often understood as an invitation to simply accept injustice. But this was a misunderstanding. He said that Jesus, the Sermon on the Mount, was not about passively accepting violence and injustice. The goal is to overcome both. "Blessed are the peacemakers - not the peacemakers, but the peacemakers. This is the decisive message of the Sermon on the Mount. One year after September 11th our world is to be hoped that an axis of peace will be established. For in a globalized world, peace can also only be secured globally. 11

With these words Bishop Huber gave Angela Merkel the cue to interpret the word "peacemaker" in the sense that the democracy-loving states had to join forces to punish a dictator who had nothing to do with "9/11"! And when one considers how the so-called "War on Terror" has meanwhile set the whole Middle East ablaze, the words "peacemaker" and "axis of peace" become cruel phrases in this context.

Two days later, on September 13, 2002, Angela Merkel said in her speech in the Bundestag that globalization requires us to rethink the relationship between internal and external security. Both

They are inseparable, and we can only achieve both for our countries if we form an alliance of the states of this world that want democracy and freedom, and do not go it alone in Germany. "And on September 11th, we all commemorated the victims of September 11th in an impressive service in Berlins Cathedral. Bishop Huber said: Blessed are those who make peace, for they are called sons and daughters of God - from the Sermon on the Mount. And he interpreted it for us..." 12 Opposition leader Dr. Angela Merkel thus considered the then US President, George W. Bush and the British Prime Minister Tony Blair with their Alliance of the Willing to be "peacemakers" in the sense of the Sermon on the Mount. But peace was not founded and it was already foreseeable for reasonable people at that time that peace would not be secured by a war of aggression and bombs in violation of international law. Today, sixteen years later, Iraq is still sinking into chaos and violence, and peace has been lastingly destroyed.

Noteworthy are the career boosts that Huber and Merkel enjoyed soon after: Bishop Wolfgang Huber became Chairman of the EKD Council in 2003 and Dr. Angela Merkel became German Chancellor in 2005.

However, the peace demonstration had had an effect - but the war hawks did not give in. New advances came: On May 22, 2010, the then Federal President Horst Köhler announced that Germany "with its dependence on foreign trade must also resort to military means to protect its interests in case of doubt". 13 At that time this was still considered a breach of taboo.

Four years later, on 31 January 2014, Federal President Joachim Gauck opened the 50th Munich Security Conference with a speech in which he practically called for "more responsibility" of Germany in the world. 14 Foreign Minister Frank-Walter Steinmeier and Defence Minister Ursula von der Leyen (CDU) responded positively to Gauck's speech. 15

Media supported the new German hardliners. Another example is an article in the Berliner Morgenpost of 10.1.2016, in which Wolfgang Ischinger and Josef Fischer's role in the Jugo-Slavic war was portrayed in a positive light:

"Fischer agreed, barely in office, that for the first time since the Second World War German soldiers were sent into combat. German Tornados bombed Belgrade with the aim of forcing the Serbian government to give in. At the same time, a peace plan was presented to it... And probably also it's no coincidence that Ischinger had his hands in it as Secretary of State. Moreover, Fischer had promoted the non-Green Party member Ischinger, making him his most important employee"16 .

After Donald Trump's election victory, Wolfgang Ischinger offered himself to the new US administration on November 11, 2016, in an article in the New York Times, writing: "But wherever Mr. Trump will look, he will not find better partners for the work of securing the strategic interests of the US and serving as a multiplier for its military power. 17

At the beginning of 2018, the speech of the British General Sir Nicholas Carter, then the highest military officer in the British Army, stands out particularly strikingly. On 22 January 2018 he delivered a speech at the Royal United Services Institute in the UK. In this speech, he warned against Russia and demanded what Kramp-Karrenbauer was prepared to deliver in her speech of 7 November 2019: namely, he called for "boots on the ground", i.e., ground troops of NATO allies.18

From this point on, the media campaigns also intensify in this sense:

Press campaign in preparation for Kramp-Karrenbauer's keynote speech?

On June 8, 2018, US-NATO Ambassador Kay Hutchison gave an interview on Deutschlandfunk radio in which she said: "We would like to see Germany take the lead. As the largest economy in Europe, Germany was the country that could contribute the most - and from the US point of view should therefore also assume a leading role in the European alliance.

The US ambassador to NATO therefore believes that Germany should also take a leading role in the event of a confrontation with Russia.

Kay Hutchinson knows German history. The presenter pointed out to her the incriminating past. But Hutchison excused the Germans. Unfortunately, Germany did not yet see that it had grown beyond its past and that it was now "democratic" and a "guardian of democracy". She believed that Europe wanted a German leadership role because Germany had come out of its dark history so successfully and had managed to reunify. There was no reason why Germany should not have the leading role in Europe, but that also meant that one should be able to defend oneself.

It is not said that this would mean destruction for Germany.

Two months later, on August 11, 2018, Wolfgang Ischinger gave an interview to the Tagesspiegel, in which he made the following remarkably borderline statement: "As German ambassador to the USA, I was happy to say that in history we Germans have often been on the wrong side. Now we will always be on the right side." 20

He thinks you always do everything right if you're only on the side of the West? In view of the facts described so far, that the elites of the British and the USA have often given other states "Pandora's boxes" and put them in checkmate by setting traps, an absolutely brainless remark. Just think of the traps and deceptions set for Saddam Hussein, Adolf Hitler and the Germans at the outbreak of the First World War.

On 5 May 2019, US Ambassador Richard Grenell urged Germany to increase its military spending.²¹ Soon afterwards, in view of the dubious incidents surrounding the British tanker in the Persian Gulf in the summer of 2019, three Germans at once can imagine Germany "taking on more responsibility." On 26 July Karl-Theodor zu Guttenberg gives an interview to CNBC on the subject²², two days later Wolfgang Ischinger presses for German participation in an EU protection mission in the Gulf.²³ And on 3 August 2019 Green Party leader Habeck also shows himself open to such a mission.²⁴

On 5th September 2019 in Cicero the President of the Federal Academy for Security Policy in Berlin, Karl-Heinz Kamp, attested in Cicero to China's "grip on the world" and claimed that "the rise of China will have dramatic effects on the security situation in Europe". "In the long term, however, if China's rise in global politics becomes more and more evident in military terms as well, the large European states will not be able to avoid building up their own capabilities for far-reaching power projection, especially in the maritime sector, in a third step. This applies not only from the perspective of NATO, but also from the perspective of the EU, if it wants to live up to its own claim of being a 'global player'".²⁵

This sounds like a blueprint for the Defense Minister's speech on November 7. But even before that, she made an advance on 21 October 2019 by calling for an international security zone in northern Syria²⁶, for which she was praised by Friedrich Merz²⁷ two days later and by Wolfgang Ischinger three days later.²⁸

And on 29 October, Wolfgang Schäuble will also speak. In the Tagesspiegel it says: "Schäuble demands stronger military engagement by Germany. The President of the Bundestag wants to strengthen Germany's ability to form alliances: Wolfgang Schäuble moves from parliamentary reservation to a Syrian protection zone." "The President of the Bundestag emphasized that there is certainly support among the population for more German responsibility. A majority wants Germany to commit itself not only to its own security, but also to that of its allies and in the fight against terrorism."²⁹

This sentence is the untruth, as the above-mentioned surveys show.³

One can see the massive campaign that took place by these relatively few prominent politicians before the Defence Minister's keynote speech - a campaign that was accompanied by the media - up to talk shows at Maybritt Illner, where Sigmar Gabriel, now Chairman of Atlantikbrücke, also agreed with this tenor.³⁰

On November 8, 2019, i.e. one day before the "fateful day" of the Germans, the future EU Commission President Ursula von der Leyen, to crown it all, gave a speech to the Konrad Adenauer Foundation in Berlin in which she said: "Europe must also learn the language of power. The so-called 'soft power' is no longer sufficient today if Europeans want to assert themselves in the world. "On the one hand that means building up our own muscles where we could rely on others for a long time - for example in security policy." The EU needs more military capabilities. On the other hand, it must make greater use of the available force to assert European interests."³¹

Bottom line:

The following conclusion can be drawn: The transatlantic background powers are pressing very strongly for Germany - and possibly all EU states - to devote the lives of their soldiers to the economic interests of Western interests in the future.

In an article in KenFM the historian Wolfgang Effenberger quotes the Chief of Staff General Omar N.

Bradley with his testimony before Congress on July 20, 1949:

"First, the United States will be entrusted with strategic bombing..." because the first priority in collective defense is our ability to transport nuclear weapons. "Second, the United States Navy and the Western Seas will carry out the main naval operations, including the protection of the sea lanes. The Western European Union and the other states will take over the defence of their own ports and coasts. Thirdly, we believe that the bulk of the land forces should come from Europe".

The bulk of the land forces are to come from Europe. This must be held together with the statement of former General Gerd Schmückle, former Deputy NATO Commander-in-Chief, who was also quoted in Effenberger's article and who summed up NATO's new intervention goals: "Ultimately, it is the interests of the United States that decide where to intervene. Everything revolves around the economy. Where is there oil, where are the future oil wells?"³²

It is therefore not a question of "Germany's own strategic interests" or those of the EU, as Kramp-Karrenbauer claims, but of the interests of the United States. The shocking thing about the wording of Kramp-Karrenbauer's speech of 7 November 2019 is that the legal, international and constitutional question is not even asked.

The German Bundeswehr is not there to assert its interests. And it is certainly not there to enforce the interests of the US empire. Besides: There is no danger at all from China and Russia. At least that's the opinion of former Lieutenant Colonel Jochen Scholz.³³

That war is permissible as a means of enforcing selfish commercial interests or other interests is postulated by Ms. Kramp-Karrenbauer in public. Doesn't she realize that she is using this as an excuse to treat this speech later on in the same way as some deliberately misunderstood speeches were treated by Kaiser Wilhelm II? Doesn't she realize that this speech can later serve as evidence of Germany's alleged belligerence - even though 73 percent of Germans today do not want war? One has to ask the question: What does it mean that such a blunt, purely interest-based advance comes from a German?

That this advance has been agreed with transatlantic circles seems pretty certain, considering the campaigns described in this essay - also that a woman should do it. But don't Mrs. Kramp-Karrenbauer and all the other German transatlanticists who support her realize that they are walking into a trap - just as stupid German decision-makers have walked into carefully prepared traps set by the Anglo-Saxons before? It is a trap because Germany cannot simply claim "strategic interests" in a warlike manner - "like any other state in the world" - because Germany lies in the middle of Europe and has the most neighbours. A country with so many neighbours cannot afford war, because the danger is far too great that a powerful, non-European enemy could win a neighbouring country as an ally against Germany

- and then Germany would once again be exposed to a war on two fronts.

In order to be able to ban all Germans again and again into a <spiritual> prison of guilt, which up to now has so successfully helotised Germany for decades, those who operate behind the curtain absolutely need Germany's participation in a future great war. And if the background powers even succeed in a world war with German participation, then this would provide the reason to put an end to the Germans once and for all - if they have not already physically disappeared through nuclear strikes.

How enormous must the indoctrination of certain German elites be that they do not see this danger?

The Foreign Office in Berlin seems to be a kind of appendix of the State Department, the Pentagon and the CIA together

An article by: Editor, 22 January 2020 at 13:51

Marco Dette, a reader of NachDenkSeiten, asked the Foreign Office, or more precisely the German Foreign Minister, whether he shares the opinion of the German Bundestag's Scientific Service that the killing of Iranian General Soleimani was an act contrary to international law. He has received a reply from the Foreign Office. We are documenting both mails and, before that, his comment on the incident. Albrecht Müller.

Marco Dette to the editors of NachDenkSeiten:

"it's amazing, with a lot of audacity, that AA simply takes over US claims. It doesn't matter whether it's about alleged dangers for US citizens, against which one must of course act preventively and simply accept a war with many casualties, or about the use of Ramstein, from where of course only targeted drone attacks are carried out and civilians could never be killed. When I read such an answer like the one from the Foreign Office, I feel honoured, and that is expressed very nicely.

The documentation of the two e-mails, firstly the mail from Marco Dette to the AA and secondly the Answer from the Foreign Office, and then a supplement:

Subject: Scientific service for Soleimani

Dear Mr. Foreign Minister Maas

How do you assess the assessment of the Scientific Service that the killing of Soleimani was an act contrary to international law?

How much would the German government be involved if it turned out that the drone had been directed via the Ramstein relay station? Wouldn't Germany then be complicit in the killing? Would this not be a devastating signal for German diplomacy?

I seem to recall that the Scientific Service asked the Federal Government to examine the activities at the US Air Base Ramstein because drone attacks and international law do not fit together. What is the current state of affairs?

Awaiting a reply

Second: Answer from the Federal Foreign Office

Subject: Your request of 19 January 2020 - Subject: Scientific service on Soleimani

Dear Mr. Dette,

Thank you very much for your inquiry to Federal Foreign Minister Maas below.

With regard to the killing of General Qassem Soleimani on 3rd January by a targeted US air strike, the Federal Government took note of the letter from the USA to the UN Security Council on 8th January stating that General Soleimani had been involved in the planning and execution of several armed attacks by Iran on US installations in Iraq and the region. In response to an escalating series of such attacks, the United States acted in exercise of its right of self-defense under international law. In the view of the USA, Soleimani had not only been the mastermind of these attacks, but as a military man and commander had been a legitimate military target under international law of war. This goal had been counteracted by a targeted strike in accordance with the provisions of international humanitarian law.

A comprehensive assessment of this US claim by the German government under international law requires a detailed analysis of the actual circumstances. However, the Federal Government does not have knowledge of all the circumstances of this case.

The Federal Government has taken note of the report of the Scientific Service to which you refer. In principle, the Federal Government does not comment on such contributions to the scientific debate.

Armed drones are not weapons prohibited under international law, and their use does not per se violate international law. The Federal Government is engaged in a dialogue of trust with our American partners on the questions of a possible role of the US Air Force base at Ramstein in the use of armed drones. The United States has repeatedly confirmed to the Federal Government that activities at U.S. military bases in Germany are conducted in accordance with applicable law.

With kind regards

Addendum Albrecht Müller: The experience that our reader Dette makes here also corresponds to what other journalists at the federal press conference: the spokeswoman of the Foreign Office, as well as spokespersons of other ministries and the government spokesperson, behave there like docile appendages of US interests. That really was better before. I can judge this to a certain extent, because in my time as head of the Planning Department in the Chancellery I experienced every day in the morning situation how independently my colleagues from the Foreign Affairs Department of the Federal Chancellery, who each came from the Foreign Office and went back there, acted and argued. They behaved like civil servants and diplomats serving our country and paid by the German taxpayer. The Federal Foreign Ministers Willy Brandt, Walter Scheel and Hans-Dietrich Genscher were of a different calibre than their successor today. Here, what the South German vernacular says is simply true: Like the Lord, like the Lord, like the Gscherr.

Sakharova: US Secretary of State Pompeo has admitted interference in the internal affairs of many countries

January 23, 2020 - 5:01 p.m. <https://de.rt.com/22xi>

Sakharova: US Secretary of State Pompeo has admitted interference in the internal affairs of many countries.
giveSource: Sputnik

Sakharova on Pompeo's interview: Admitting US interference in the internal affairs of other countries.

Mike Pompeo has made a de facto confession about US interference in the internal affairs of other countries. This was the comment of Russian Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Mariya Sakharova on the interview given by the US Secretary of State to Caracol TV.

In today's world order, without exception, all coups d'état in resource-rich countries or countries of geopolitical importance have their roots in the United States of America.

For those who still doubt it, US Secretary of State Mike Pompeo in his recent interview with the Colombian channel Caracol TV has virtually made a confession - even if it is easy to overlook it between all the lurid claims of alleged connections of the Venezuelan government to real as well as alleged terrorist organizations in this interview. In return, the spokeswoman of the Russian Foreign Ministry, Mariya Sakharova, juxtaposed some of Pompeo's statements from this interview.

On the one hand, Pompeo promised to continue to work on strategies for regime change in Venezuela, the aim of which is the deposition of President Nicolás Maduro:

The goal of our common mission is to eliminate Maduro. We're in the middle of a project that will end with Maduro gone.

On the other hand, Pompeo answered the question of the correctness of the strategy of continuing to support Juan Guaidó in this way:

You know, I'm more likely to get word that this is going down. I remember the words of former US Secretary of State Baker - he told me that before the collapse of the Soviet Union nobody believed that the strategy was working either. But it has worked.

On the basis of these statements, Sakharova concluded

Here, friends, we see international law in Washington execution. We have heard a direct confession from the US Secretary of State that his country is engaged in campaigns to destabilize sovereign states. In essence, Mike Pompeo's two statements provided the justification for the laws passed in Russia on foreign agents, on the sovereign Internet and so on. It is a pity about the efforts of the US ambassadors to convince the world community of the peaceableness of the US and the legitimacy of US 'freedom exports'. Words that prove once again that the USA never abandoned its tactics of interfering in the internal affairs of sovereign states and its policy of regime change. Whether by soft power or by means of provocation and coups d'état will be decided on a case-by-case basis. And 'de-democracy' or 'democratic construction' of any state has been used by the US for decades as a tool to shape the domestic political situation in these states as required by Washington.

Corona virus: Eight new deaths in China - another 12 cities sealed off

Epoch Times24. January 2020 Updated: January 24, 2020 7:57

In China, eight more people have died of the new lung disease. The number of proven infections rose from 644 to 830 cases. However, the number of suspected cases reported is much higher.

Eight more people have fallen victim to the new lung disease in China. A total of 26 deaths from coronavirus infections have now been confirmed, according to China's National Health Administration.

Compared to the previous day, the number of detected infections increased from 644 to 830 cases. To prevent the disease from spreading further, China had practically quarantined around 20 million people on Thursday shortly before the Chinese New Year.

In addition to the 11 million metropolis of Wuhan, the authorities have now sealed off 13 other cities in Hubei province, including Ezhou, Xiantao, Zhijiang, Qianjiang, Huanggang, Chibi, Jingmen, Xianning and Huangshi (including the city of Daye in Yangxin), Dangyang, Enshi, Xiaogan. In all these cities, all local and long-distance transportation has been suspended.

In a recent communication from the authority for prevention and control of lung epidemics in Pro-vinz Hubei, all travel agencies in the province are called upon to cease operations as of Friday (24th). No more travel groups may be organized or new orders accepted. Planned trips must be cancelled or postponed indefinitely.

The start of school after the spring holidays was also postponed. Government agencies, companies and institutions, the military and armed police forces had to cancel their business trips. All major events such as trade fairs were cancelled and all flights, train rides, coach connections and shipping within Wuhan and out of the city were suspended.

In addition, the tunnel connecting Wuchang and Hankou was closed and temperature monitoring was carried out on the bridge. The number of suspected cases is increasing daily. Currently, more than 7000 people have been placed under observation. The only provinces in China not yet affected by the outbreaks of the epidemic are in Qinghai and Tibet.

WHO does not yet recommend travel restrictions

The World Health Organisation (WHO) does not at present see any reason to declare a health emergency of international concern and therefore does not recommend any travel or trade restrictions.

The Foreign Office in Berlin, on the other hand, advised to postpone unnecessary travel to the affected areas. The risk for German travelers in Wuhan was considered "moderate". Federal Health Minister Jens Spahn called for a level-headed approach to the new lung disease that has broken out in China. "We are taking this very seriously, we are vigilant, but at the same time with a cool head", the CDU politician said on Thursday evening on ARD's "Tagesthemen".

In individual cases, the virus has also been detected in patients in other countries such as Thailand and the USA. On Thursday the first detected case was reported in Singapore. Japan reported a second case six months before the start of the Olympic Games in Tokyo.

The man in his 40s comes from the Chinese metropolis of Wuhan, the Ministry of Health announced on Friday. The man is visiting Japan. They said that he was being treated in a hospital in Tokyo.

No case is known in Europe so far. According to German infection specialists, however, imported individual cases of the new lung disease are "probable" in Germany as well. However, the German Society for Infectious Diseases said that there is no reason for concern. Clinics are currently making preparations to be able to react quickly to these cases. The climate plumbers

To reduce the concentration of the greenhouse gas carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, it is not enough to stop its emission. Climate engineers want to capture and store it with adventurous technologies and serious interventions in natural processes. The fact that the world urgently needs alternative production and consumption patterns instead is being ideologically ignored.

By STEFAN KREUTZBERGER | Published in: Environment

Symbol image: Air pollution

The concentration of the climate gas carbon dioxide in the atmosphere has exceeded the barely tolerable threshold of 350 ppm (parts per million), the ratio of CO_2 molecules to the remaining particles, for many years. The measuring station on the 3800-meter Mauna-Loa in Hawaii reported a peak value of 405.51 ppm in early October 2018. The natural value fluctuated on average between 180 ppm in cold periods and 300 ppm in warm periods. Before the great industrialization of 1870, it was 288 ppm. If all fossil fuel reserves were burned, the CO_2 content could probably reach 5000 ppm in 280 years, five times as high as in the days of the dinosaurs - and it was an average of 8 degrees warmer than today.

However, if we want to limit the rise in temperature to 2 degrees Celsius by the year 2100, and that is the declared global climate goal, we can only blow a total of about 600 billion tonnes of CO_2 into the air. So far, however, about 40 billion tonnes of carbon dioxide produced by humans are released every year. If this were to continue, it would be "shift" in 15 years at the latest. All the scientists and politicians involved are aware of these interrelationships, but - as is so often the case - they are playing for time and burdening the generation of their children and grandchildren with the problem. In the IPCC's October 2018 special report and at the last UN Climate Change Conference in Katowice, Poland, it was therefore soberly stated that the climate targets can no longer be met by reduced emissions alone and that the world is heading for a warming of around 4 degrees Celsius. The only way to help is a plan B: the excess gas waste must be removed from the atmosphere. This should be done by means of "negative emission technologies" (NETs). The excess CO_2 should be captured and safely stored in natural "sinks" in the ground and in the oceans. This already happens naturally every day. In the ideal case, Mother Nature returns the CO_2 emissions in the terrestrial carbon cycle, which are produced without human intervention, for example during the breathing of living organisms, the thriving of plants and their decomposition, and binds the annually occurring carbon with around 11 gigatonnes in vegetation and soils and with 9 gigatonnes in the oceans. The problem, however, is that humanity is adding double that amount. The tub is therefore overflowing: considerably more is flowing in than can naturally flow out.

The simple basic idea is now to use new technologies to help the "inert" nature, to put artificial sinks under it and to turn a few important screws here and there. In this way more CO_2 is to be bound than is emitted. The whole undertaking is called "geoengineering" in a correspondingly technocratic way and aims to "repair" the climate system. However, it is still completely unclear whether what was once destroyed can be sustainably repaired, and in some cases this is pure fiction. Moreover, the consequences of individual interventions and interventions in our complex ecosystem can be devastating and exacerbate the climate crisis even further. Many scientists and non-governmental organisations, such as Misereor, therefore urgently warn against such experiments. Nobody should open Pandora's box. 1

Of artificial trees, cloud makers and foaming seas

Basically, the resourceful climate engineers see two starting points for turning the thermometer: One is to extract CO_2 directly from the atmosphere and store it on an industrial scale (Carbon Dioxide Removal) and the other is to reduce the amount of solar radiation that warms the earth (Solar Radiation Management). The latter could - no joke! - by injecting aerosols into the atmosphere: Inorganic particles, sulfur or other reflecting materials, introduced into the stratosphere over large areas by jets, are supposed to return sunlight back into space throw it back. Our cities, houses and squares could be painted white and the reflectivity of land surfaces could be increased by the cultivation of genetically modified plants. In addition, dark trees and forests should be cut down in still existing snow-covered regions. The reflectivity of the surface water of the oceans could be increased by microbubbles of artificial foaming agents. But that's not all, they also want to make light clouds: To this end, ships with cannons are to spray seawater into dark clouds, which will then evaporate there. Remaining sea salt crystals would then act as condensation nuclei and thus create more and brighter clouds, which in turn reflect more sunlight. Beautiful views ...

Expensive insanity

The proposed measures for capturing and storing carbon dioxide sound similarly adventurous and fictional: Large, series-connected fans suck the ambient air through a special filter in which chemical sorbents such as calcium carbonate extract and bind the CO₂ so that it can later be locked in gas cylinders. These artificial trees are to be built in uninhabited regions, like huge forests. Another land-based technology is based on the large-scale application of ground basalt or powdered silicates on meadows and fields. The rock "turbo-weathered" in this way reacts with CO₂ from the air and binds it in the soil. Another variant is marine fertilization: ships discharge tons of nutrients such as iron and urine into the oceans to stimulate the increased growth of phytoplankton. If it dies, it sinks and takes the bound carbon with it to the bottom of the sea, according to theory.

Geoengineering also relies on renewable raw materials: In the so-called BECCS technology (Bio-energy with Carbon Capture and Storage), biomass is cultivated, for example in the form of fast-growing trees or oil-bearing arable crops, which absorb CO₂. It is then burned to produce energy and the CO₂ is filtered out of the exhaust gases and stored underground. However, the problem is that these projects all cost an enormous amount of money and, similar to nuclear waste, there are no safe final storage sites. Unfortunately, it is not possible to quickly produce fossil oil or to permanently press gas into deeper layers of the earth - a process that takes nature thousands of years to carry out. The cheapest calculation for capturing and temporarily storing CO₂ is 150 dollars per ton. Given the 40 billion tonnes required annually, that would be half the world's military budget. Who will want to finance this? Apart from that, however, such technologies also take up huge areas of land, especially in the global south. This would inevitably lead to increased land-grabbing and the violation of human rights, especially those of indigenous communities. Moreover, land grabbing competes with food production and can lead to even more hunger in the world and drastically increasing food prices. Manipulating climate and regional weather events can (and does) also have military uses and can be used for war purposes. Even more serious is the fact that such an intervention in the Earth system is completely untested and highly risky. The ecological risks are incalculable. In the worst case, they could change the entire ecosystem forever - with serious consequences for life and humanity.

Growth versus climate protection

How do well-educated and highly paid scientists and engineers come up with such ideas? This is due to their system of thought. All official scenarios for achieving climate protection targets are dogmatically based on the prevailing growth-fixed policy and progressive consensus. Alternative production and consumption patterns simply do not exist in this world of thought. Climate protection can only be afforded if the car keeps rolling and the economy grows steadily. Necessary social changes are dismissed as utopia and possibilities of influence are only seen on a technical level. Climate protection without geoengineering seems impossible under this premise. However, everything could be completely different if one were to rely on nature itself and human life on a mass scale: In a world that is to be decarbonized immediately, deforestation must be stopped, agricultural land must not be allowed to expand any further, and existing forests must be afforested and renatured. The waste of food and the consumption of meat must be reduced, as must the production of cars and military equipment, for example. Instead of growth and increasing the gross national product, the motto must be negative growth, sufficiency and fair prosperity for all people at a sustainable level. It is therefore a question for the future how and in which world we want to live, writes Kai Kuhnhehn of the Competence Network New Economy, and also criticizes the scenarios and climate models of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, as they "do not allow for an analysis of a departure from the growth model": "The results derived from these models will therefore never contain recommendations that would lead to an increase in the quality of life if they simultaneously resulted in a decrease in GDP. 2 Consequently, the greatest enemy of our global climate is the dominant capitalist economic system, and the most important contribution to climate protection is a departure from the resulting lifestyle. Monsignor Pirmin probably agrees Spiegel, Chief Executive Officer and Chairman of the Board of the Catholic relief organization Misereor, says when he writes: "Climate change is above all the result of a world economic system geared to infinite growth. To break up and tackle this one-sided model of thinking would massively reduce emissions and render dangerous geoengineering interventions in existing, complex ecosystems obsolete". 3 He's right. But will the profit vultures and growth ideologists listen to him?

With all means for the great inferno

In Germany, Austria and Switzerland, an extremely aggressive lobby networked with ultra-right US think tanks is fighting for an escalation policy against Iran - with money from the federal government and support from the left.

By SUSANN WITT-STAHN | Published in: World Politics

The lobby is pursuing a maximum confrontation course with Iran. Ever since the Islamic Republic began its defensive struggle against the petrodollar - this was one of the economic reasons that led then US President George W. Bush to add the country to his "axis of evil" in 2002 - and after Iran switched its oil business to non-US dollar currencies in 2007 and opened the Iranian oil exchange in 2008, an increasingly broad front of transatlantic NGOs and media, supported by politicians, has been forming in the Western world.

In this country, too, a number of neo-conservative pressure groups were founded, flanked by the Springer Group, which have been trying for years to pressure the German government to escalate its relations with Iran. The election of Donald Trump as U.S. president (who is currently still oscillating between isolationism and interventionism), his cancellation of the nuclear agreement in 2018, and the steady tightening of sanctions, such as the prohibition of trade with Iran by third countries in violation of international law, give the proponents of the war justified cause for hope.

Dialogue excluded

"The German government must stop slowing down the efforts of other states to effectively curb Iranian expansionism," demanded the Mideast Freedom Forum Berlin (MFFB) as early as 2008. The NGO initiates conferences and acts as "advisor" to the press, government and parliaments. 1 The MFFB, which cooperates with think tanks such as the American Enterprise Institute financed by ExxonMobil and other large corporations, never tires of emphasizing the "impossibility of dialogue" with Iran - although the country is entangled in conflicts in Syria, Yemen and Lebanon, it has never waged a war of aggression. And even though the MFFB board sends out unmistakable messages such as "The Iranian bomb must be prevented by all means", its PR events, known as "educational seminars", are supported by the German government.

Funeral service of Qasem Soleimani in Ahvaz, Iran on 5 January 2020.

MFFB is also the initiator of the best-known campaign against Iran with the Orwellian name Stop the Bomb (STB), for which the NGO eagerly collects donations. 5 "Instead of jumping on the bandwagon of the anti-Semitic terrorist regime in Iran, the EU should use the new US sanctions to rethink," STB announced after US President Donald Trump put the thumbscrews on them in November 2018. "The European policy on Iran to date has proven to be illusory. It has not contributed to an improvement of the situation in Iran and the region. The Iranian nuclear program was not ended by the nuclear agreement, but was permanently institutionalized and legalized."

With hit lists, "tracker dogs" and tax dollars

In 2012 STB was in the headlines. Intimidation measures and incitement to hatred against politicians or Iranians living in Germany, often businessmen who have nothing to do with armaments deals, were critically examined; anyone who publicly pleads for an understanding with Tehran or even against war can be affected. "Talks with Iran are demonised as an allied appeasement policy towards Nazi Germany and the use of military force is urged," summarises journalist Fabian Köhler, who had researched the more than questionable methods of STB and was subsequently exposed to hostility from the right-wing riot blog HaOlam, for example. 8 What it means to be on STB's hit list was only revealed to the - now former - director of the Jewish Museum in Berlin, Peter Schäfer, in March, after he had dared to receive the Cultural Council of the Islamic Republic. The Jewish Museum had "already attracted attention in the past by inviting anti-Israel speakers", STB defamed the institution. And his fate was sealed with the claim that Schäfer had "crossed all the red lines" and the demand that the responsible Minister of State Monika Grütters finally had to draw "personal consequences". Finally, in June, worn down by months of a well-orchestrated smear campaign, he took his hat off.

Stop the Bomb caused a sensation for the first time shortly after it was founded in 2007 with a petition for a rigorous tightening of sanctions against Iran and support for the opposition, which wants to bring about regime change. A first signatory, the Israeli historian Benny Mor-ris, found clear words and already in 2008, at a conference of STB in Vienna, advocated a war, if necessary with nuclear weapons, against Iran. 9 Such failures, however, apparently do not detract from the support of celebrities from culture, science, media and politics: The writer Elfriede Jelinek, the actress Iris Berben, the ARD journalist Esther Shapira, the editor of the Axis of Good, Henryk M. Broder, the publicist Micha Brumlik, Petra Pau from the left and many others have put their names to the STB petition - Islamophobes, military lobbyists, admirers of NATO human rights imperialism and the Netanyahu government from the right, the bourgeois as well as the left spectrum. 10

The international network of academics Scholars for Peace in the Middle East (SPME), which was established in the USA in 2008 and conducts large-scale McCarthyist de-nationalization campaigns against left-wing and other opponents of war at universities, is also not squeamish. The central figure is Matthias Küntzel, a former research associate of the Green Party's parliamentary group in the Bundestag: he co-founded SPME Germany, served on the organisation's international board for five years and is now a member of the German Council on Foreign Relations - a think tank that seeks to influence German foreign policy in the interests of major banks and arms companies such as Krauss-Maffei Wegmann and Airbus. 11 SPME, also a supporter of Stop the Bomb, already proclaimed in 2010 that it was "time to act" against Iran. 12 Today, the Network for Trumps drums on Israel policy, including the recognition of Jerusalem as the capital of the Jewish state, and in its publications targets representatives of social movements that are committed to a just peace in the Middle East and are "anti-Semitic" or "hostile to Israel" according to SPME's definition. Sympathizers are, however, called upon to closely observe the civil society campaign against the Israeli occupation policy Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions (BDS) like a "sniffer dog" and to "report" suspects to SPME. 14 On the homepage of their German section, there are articles denouncing the "fruitlessness" of diplomatic solutions in the conflict with Iran, 15 developing ideologies of legitimacy for a "pre-emptive strike" against the country 16 and attacking academics close to the peace movement, for example the academics who signed the declaration "Put an immediate end to sanctions and threats of war" in 2012.

The Amadeu Antonio Foundation (AAS) is an important pillar of the pro-war front against Iran, which is also supported by taxpayers' money - it is sponsored by the program "Living Democracy" of the Federal Ministry for Family Affairs, Senior Citizens, Women and Youth. The foundation was founded in 1998 by the ardent anti-communist Anetta Kahane and is officially dedicated to the fight against right-wing extremism. Under the guise of providing information about "israelbezo-genic anti-Semitism", it provides financial support for events with speakers from the Mideast Free dom Forum Berlin and Stop the Bomb 18 as well as in the publication of anti-Iranian brochures and cooperates with the regime change lobby in demonstration alliances.

"The people of Iran love President Trump"

Even an internationally leading head of the right-wing exile Iranian opposition has been a guest of the AAS: Amir-Abbas Fakhavar ("The people of Iran love President Trump" 20), who discussed the question "how secular democratic forces in Iran can be supported by the West in their fight for freedom". 21 None other than Sheldon Adelson, one of his great patrons, provided information about what Fakhavar had confided in him: "He says that the Iranian people will go into ecstasy when we attack," The New Yorker quoted the multi-billionaire who supported Donald Trump's election campaign with generous donations. 22

It is no coincidence that Fakhravar had already been received several times by George W. Bush during his term of office as US President. He also appears regularly on Fox News and other right-wing US media as an "Iran expert" (in the past he has also briefed European parliamentarians, including the German CDU politician Ruprecht Polenz 23). As a member of the Senate of the National Iranian Congress, considered the most influential opposition group in the US, his main goal is to push through a hard-line line against Tehran: "We urge the Trump administration to revise Obama's policy of subsidizing the activities of the Khamenei regime - the world's leading state sponsor of terrorism," Fakhravar made clear on Breitbart shortly after the presidential election in December 2016.

Alongside John Bolton against diplomatic Waterloo

The pro-war lobby is also well positioned in Austria and Switzerland. The Zurich-based Internet platform Audiatur, which is run by a foundation set up by the asset management entrepreneur Josef Bollag, takes extremely brutal action against those who refuse to pursue a policy of escalation against the Islamic Republic. Likewise, the Mena-Watch, an independent Middle East think tank founded on the initiative of Viennese steel entrepreneur Erwin Javor, which according to its own statements is an "independent Middle East think tank", which emerged in 2011 from the Middle East Media Observatory. 25 In most cases, it is enough to simply belong to the left-wing opposition in the USA, a European country or Israel to become the target of these pressure groups: Scientists, journalists and politicians who are hindering the implementation of their agenda are branded as "anti-Semites", secret allies of "the Mul-lahs" or of Islamist terror. Jewish intellectuals such as Avraham Burg, Shlomo Sand and Moshe Zuckermann are particularly badly targeted and defamed as "Jewish key witnesses" to the declared enemies; these would "market their Judaism". 27 For the operators of Mena-Watch, Trump's foreign policy does not go far enough. They accuse the US government of "inaction" - allegedly allowing "Iran to do whatever it wants in the Gulf". 28

Such positions largely correspond with the crude worldview of Trump's National Security Advisor John Bolton, one of the most important architects of the 2003 Iraq War, one of the most aggressive representatives of the weapons and armaments lobby in the U.S. He wants to see whistleblowers like Edward Snowden ("He should be hung from a high oak tree" 29) liquidated. Bolton considers the Tehran nuclear deal to be a "diplomatic Waterloo" 30 and misses no opportunity to advance the Middle East arma-geddon longed for by many US evangelicals and other ultra-rights. So it is no coincidence that there are connections between the Gatestone Institute, Audiatur, Mena-Watch and other columns of pushers for Western wars of aggression in Europe, which he helped to build up. Bolton's think tank fires racism-laden hate campaigns against a humane refugee and migration policy and cooperates with European right-wing populists like the Dutchman Geert Wilders. Quite a few of the projects of the Gatestone Institute, which as always comes under criticism because of the dissemination of fake news, are generously supported by the Middle East Forum of Daniel Pipes, the Islamophobe. He is also a sponsor of the journalist watch portal 31, which regularly denounces "traitors to the people" and on which the right-wing publisher Götz Kubitschek and Martin Sellner, head of the Identitarian Movement, present their views, and of the Mercer Family Foundation, which finances Steve Bannon's Breitbart - in other words, donors who promote anti-Semitic, even neo-fascist ideas. Of course, this does not prevent Mena-Watch and Audiatur from taking over, translating and intensively distributing a large number of Gatestone publications. And some of their authors, for example Stefan Frank (he scandalizes an alleged "war against freedom of opinion" in Germany, the victims of which are right-wing media such as Die Achse des Guten and Breitbart are 32), regularly write articles for the Institute.

This anti-Iranian armada in alliance with ultra-right hardliners like John Bolton, who does not shy away from any violation of human rights or international law when it comes to asserting the interests of US capital, is not interested in regime change or even war in the Middle East, because it is concerned about the precarious situation of

is concerned about the repressed opposition of women and minorities in the Islamic Republic This is demonstrated not least by the relationship between the pro-war lobby against Iran and the West's closest ally in the region - besides Israel: the barbaric acts perpetrated by the theocracy of Saudi Arabia on a daily basis (including crucifixions of political opponents who want to exercise their right to freedom of expression) are consistently kept silent or offensively played down by the majority. Mena-Watch has even discovered Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman, who is notorious as a butcher, as a humanist who enjoys the approval of a "significant proportion of the population, especially the younger generation": "Saudi Arabia is undergoing radical change, and the Crown Prince is trying to implement reforms at a rapid pace - by local standards - that seemed unthinkable just a few years ago. For example, from this year on women will be allowed to drive cars," announced author Thomas von der Osten-Sacken, who also writes for Springer and other corporate media, in 2018. 33 - "Anti-Germans"

Men for the rough and left supporters

For such ideological total reversals of reality in favour of the military-industrial complex and the western oil industry, propagandists who understand the craft of manipulation are needed: Thomas von der Osten-Sacken, Matthias Küntzel, Stefan Frank, as well as the co-founder of Stop the Bomb Stephan Grigat and board members of the Mena-Watch association, Florian Markl, Alexander Gruber, many of those organized by the MFFB or SPME, such as Andreas Benl and Sebastian Voigt, as well as many of their regular authors, for example Alexander Feuerherdt, come from the meanwhile flawlessly neoconservative current of the "anti-Germans". This product of the decay of the German and Austrian left, which in the early 1990s was mainly recruited from the disintegrating KGruppen, now attracts more and more career-oriented politicians, students and media workers who are still active in the left milieu.

In spite of a strict right-hand course, the men are ready for the rough and tumble of Mena-Watch, Audiatur, Stop the Bomb

The situation is no different at parliamentary level: The Berlin chapter of the party Die Linke, together with the CDU, FDP and HaOlam, supports demonstrations initiated by Stop the Bomb and other pro-war organizations for a regime change policy against Iran; the current senator for culture, Klaus Lederer, has already appeared as a speaker in 2015. 35 Members of the Left Party in the Bundestag also act as advocates of an Iranian regime change, for example, their spokesperson for defense policy Stefan Liebich; Michael Leutert even works with the Mideast Freedom Forum Berlin and held a joint press conference with it in 2018.

The longing for an intervention in Iran makes it possible: In the Freundeskreis Israel in the Thuringian parliament, politicians of the left, such as Katharina König-Preuss, even cooperate with the AfD. Stephan Grigat is also a welcome guest there. In September 2017, he gave a lecture on the question: "Economic relations with Iran - a threat to Israel?"

Right front against the peace movement

On HaOlam more and more things are growing together, which possibly belong together for a long time: In the imprint concrete and jungle-world authors are listed as "freelancers" as well as publicists who defend Islam-hater positions of the AfD (in which at present still a majority is in favour of the observance of the nuclear agreement with Iran), for example Vera Lengsfeld and Rafael Korenzecher, the editor of the Jüdi-sche Rundschau, which is becoming the mouthpiece of the association "Jews in the AfD".

What the war lobby against Iran is mainly forging together is the agenda of smashing the anti-capitalist left and the peace movement that opposes Western imperialism and seeks to prevent the looming blazing inferno in the Middle East. "I find this whole anti-imperialist scene repulsive," the head of the Amadeu Antonio Foundation Anetta Kahane announced in the taz. 39 The demands of the peace movement are "often anti-Israeli and typically anti-imperialist on the left, i.e. regressive, and theoretically allow liberal democracy to be cut open," explained the spokesperson for one of SPME's partner organisations on Audiatur-Online, "Paul Spiegel's statement 'The murderers are hiding behind the call for peace' is largely true of the German peace movement. 40 Such worldviews, usually coupled with anti-Muslim racism, give rise to fear that a great nightmare of left-wing and bourgeois humanists alike could soon become reality: a broad alliance at all levels between the transatlantic and the nationalist right, which is growing stronger everywhere.

US military analyst: Major manoeuvre "DEFENDER Europe 2020" increases risk of war with Russia

US military analyst: Major manoeuvre "DEFENDER Europe 2020" increases risk of war with Russia

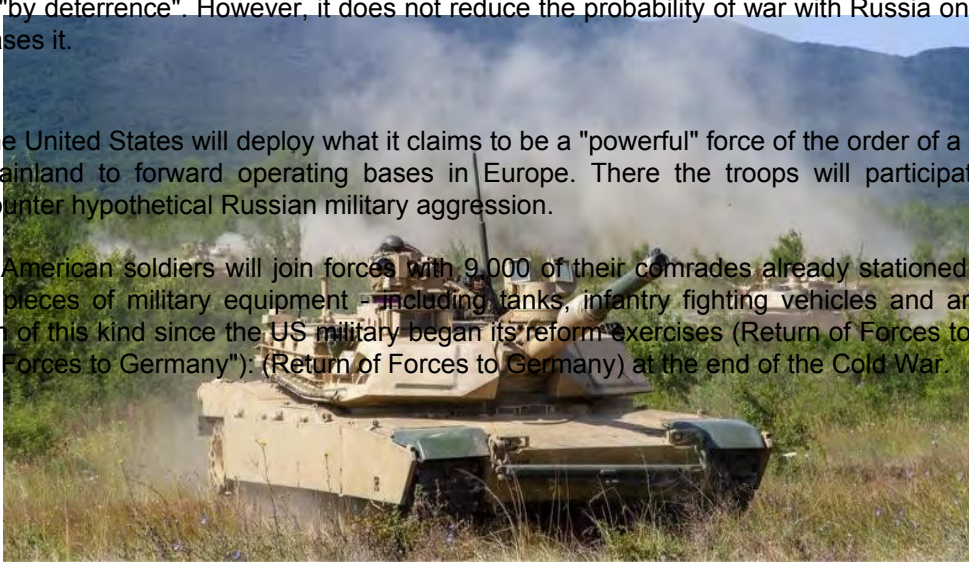

NATO exercise "US DEFENDER Europe 2020" increases the risk of war with Russia (archive photo: M1 Abrams tanks of the US Army during the Platinum Lion manoeuvre at the Novo Selo military training area in Bulgaria, July 12, 2019)

The upcoming military exercise "US DEFENDER Europe 2020" under the leadership of the USA is supposed to secure peace "by deterrence". However, it does not reduce the probability of war with Russia on European soil, but only increases it.

by Scott Ritter

Next spring, the United States will deploy what it claims to be a "powerful" force of the order of a division of sites on the US mainland to forward operating bases in Europe. There the troops will participate in exercises designed to counter hypothetical Russian military aggression.

About 20,000 American soldiers will join forces with 9,000 of their comrades already stationed in Europe and about 13,000 pieces of military equipment - including tanks, infantry fighting vehicles and artillery - for the largest mission of this kind since the US military began its reform exercises (Return of Forces to Germany, i.e., the "Return of Forces to Germany"): (Return of Forces to Germany) at the end of the Cold War.

This exercise, codenamed US DEFENDER Europe 2020, represents the culmination of more than six years of work by the US military to rebuild its ground offensive capability in Europe, which was lost when the last heavy weapons of the US forces were withdrawn in 2013.

Following the Crimea's accession to Russia following a referendum in 2014 and the outbreak of separatist fighting in the Russian-speaking parts of eastern Ukraine, the U.S.-led NATO alliance has made a visible effort to put together a conventional force capable of repulsing possible Russian aggression against the Baltic states and Poland. In particular, the United States began to deploy a full-time 1,500-strong armoured brigade to Poland and to provide pre-positioned stocks of military vehicles and equipment for additional incoming forces. US DEFENDER Europe 2020 is the first comprehensive exercise of such a force deployment in its entirety.

Russia's reaction to the expansion of NATO

Russia, for its part, has not been inactive. After the collapse of the Soviet Union, the Russian army was fundamentally restructured, abandoning the massive tank units designed for war with NATO and concentrating instead on smaller, more mobile formations that were conducive to regional security.

FIGU-ZEITZEICHEN, No. 141, May/1 2020

A major ground war in Europe was no longer considered in Russian military thinking. This changed, however, when NATO began to expand its armed forces in Poland and the Baltic States. Russia reactivated the 1st Armoured Guard Army and the 20th Guard Army, creating a powerful offensive mechanism designed to thwart any possible aggressive NATO advances into western Russia. Russian forces in the Kaliningrad exclave were also strengthened.

After the USA withdrew from the INF Treaty in August last year, great attention was paid to the possible resumption of a new nuclear arms race in Europe. As a result, developments in conventional warfare have tended to go unnoticed in the mainstream media. The fact is, however, that the reinforcement of NATO's conventional forces in response to Russian aggression - real or perceived - in Eastern Europe and the Baltic States through major exercises such as US DEFENDER Europe 2020 will inevitably lead to a greater Russian backlash and thus to even greater conventional armament.

There will be no winners, only losers

There has not been a major ground war in Europe since the end of the Second World War in 1945, and when the Cold War ended in 1991, many experts believed that such a conflict was unimaginable today. This thinking continues to this day, because the shadow of the nuclear arms race continues to cast over the entire globe. However, the greatest threat to Europe does not come from nuclear weapons - the consequences of every nuclear conflict make their use unimaginable.

However, this does not apply to conventional military conflicts. The ease with which the US and NATO deploy conventional weapons on Russia's borders and with which Russia prepares conventional military counter-reactions underlines the fact that conventional troops are relatively easy to deploy, unlike nuclear weapons. The ugly truth is that the probability of conventional military confrontation as a result of a crisis in Eastern Europe or the Baltic States is very high.

The speed and destructive power of modern weapons mean that any conventional NATO-Russia conflict would be conducted with a level of sustained violence not seen in the world for over 75 years. The sacrifices that would be inflicted on both sides are beyond the imagination of populations unfamiliar with the reality of modern warfare. The same applies to the collateral damage to civilians who find themselves in the midst of potential battlefields. In short, the consequences of a conventional ground war in Europe - namely death and destruction on an enormous scale - would spread over vast areas in a very short time.

At some point, even the most modern fighter jets have to get back on the ground, where they can become easy prey in the event of a war between the USA and Russia or China.

Read more: Latest RAND war simulation against China and Russia: "The US gets its ass kicked."

The US and NATO can talk as much as they like about how exercises like US DEFENDER Europe 2020 will make the continent more stable and secure, and how this will make a European deterrent against any possible Russian aggression more powerful. But there can be no deterrence unless both sides are prepared to respond to each other's actions.

The fact is that US DEFENDER Europe 2020 is only the latest in a series of aggressive NATO failures. These stem from the Alliance's enlargement to include former Warsaw Pact countries following the collapse of the Soviet Union - and have produced strictly causal chains of reaction that increase rather than decrease the likelihood of war with Russia.

Should a war break out, it will be the task of historians to share the responsibility for it among the participants. But one thing is certain: just as in a nuclear war, in a conventional military conflict there will be no winners, only losers.

Scott Ritter is a former US Marine Reconnaissance Officer. He served in the Soviet Union as an inspector for the implementation of the INF Treaty, on General Schwarzkopf's staff during the Gulf War and as UN weapons inspector from 1991-1998.

From Bolle Selke

The corona virus originates from the Chinese metropolis Wuhan. Not far from there is also the National Biosafety Laboratory of China. Opinions that see a connection are quickly dismissed as conspiracy theories. One thing is certain: the epidemic is man-made.

There are now over 6000 corona cases - most of them in China. This number is now higher than during the sars epidemic and will certainly increase further. The number of deaths in the People's Republic rose from 106 to 132. 15 countries outside China are affected by the corona virus so far, including the USA, France and Singapore. In Germany there are four confirmed cases.

Is the coronavirus from the lab?

A market in Wuhan is considered the starting point for the 2019-nCoV pathogen. Most of the infected and dead are found in the corresponding Hubei province. The Chinese national laboratory for biosafety is also located not far from the million metropole. The laboratory is the only declared site in China that is allowed to work with deadly viruses. The corona virus is also logically being researched there. Already in 2017 the journal "Nature" wrote at the opening of the laboratory:

"Some scientists outside China fear the escape of pathogens..."

The SARS virus has already escaped several times from high-level security facilities in Beijing, said Richard Ebright, molecular biologist at Rutgers University in Piscataway, New Jersey. Tim Trevan, founder of CHROME

Biosafety and Biosecurity Consulting in Damascus, Maryland, said that an open culture is important to ensure the safety of such laboratories. He wonders how easy this is in China's hierarchical society.

The microbiologist Danny Shoam was an analyst for biological and chemical warfare in the Middle East and worldwide with the Israeli secret service from 1970 to 1991. The former secret service agent has also explicitly dealt with Chinese bio-warfare. He told the US-American newspaper "Washington Times" that the corona virus could be related to the laboratory:

"Certain laboratories of the Institute have probably dealt with Chinese [biological weapons] at least in an accompanying capacity, but probably not as the main facility of Chinese biological warfare. Shoam added that the work on biological weapons is done in the framework of a dual civil-military research and is "definitely undercover".

All conspiracy theory?

Such opinions are not mentioned in the German media, and if they are, it is only to discredit them as conspiracy theories. The "Tagesschau" directly addresses the topic "Coronavirus as alleged conspiracy" in an article. In addition to the "patent conspiracy" that the virus was abandoned to sell vaccines and the "Gates conspiracy" that Bill Gates would profit from the coronavirus outbreak, the article also mentions the Chinese national biosafety laboratory. The Tagesschau also mentions the "Washington Times" article and cannot really refute this "conspiracy". They try to do this by saying that it is believed that the " novel coronavirus had its origin at the wildlife market in Wuhan, which was closed at the beginning of the year. However, there is still no proof of this."

The corona epidemic is of human origin

What is hard to deny is that nCoV-2019 was spread by man. David Quammen, author of "Spillover: The Animal Origin of Worldwide Diseases", writes in a commentary for the "New York Times" that although the virus could have originated in a bat cave, it was "human activities" that spread it.

Corona virus: risk of infection from food and packages from China?

Quammen justifiably draws attention to the fact that mankind is invading tropical forests and other wild habitats that are home to many species of animals and plants - and in these creatures many unknown viruses. Trees are felled, animals are killed and caged for display in markets. This would disrupt ecosystems and release viruses from their natural hosts. In this case, these viruses need a new host, often humans. So Quammen is right to warn:

"So if you're no longer worried about this outbreak, worry about the next one. Or do something about the current circumstances."

Von der Leyen can provide official housing in the Commission building - for 72 000 euro

EU Commission President Ursula von der Leyen does not have to look for a flat in Brussels. She has arranged for an apartment to be set up in the headquarters of her authority. However, she still pockets most of the generous rent subsidy paid by the Commission.

Ursula von der Leyen, the new President of the EU Commission, has had an official residence installed in the Commission building. This was reported by the French newspaper Libération, which had already reported critically and well-informedly on previous occasions about the former German defence minister.

According to this, the apartment is located on the 13th floor of the Berlaymont building. The 20 square metre apartment with bath and shower is a former relaxation room next to the von der Leyens office. According to the newspaper, the renovation cost 72,000 euros.

Criticism of the expensive conversion was met by the Commission with the argument that the President could now work day and night, and that the solution now found would lead to savings in the EU budget. This argument, however, is not accepted by Jean Quatremer, Libération's correspondent in Brussels and author of the article.

In addition to her monthly salary of approximately EUR 28 000, von der Leyen receives 'compensation' for rental costs amounting to EUR 4185 per month. According to a spokesperson, von der Leyen, who now does not need a flat in Brussels and therefore does not pay rent, does not waive this sum in its entirety, but only a share of EUR 1500. As the Commission President also receives the monthly lump sum of 1418 euros for "expenses", she will receive over 4100 euros in addition to her salary - tax-free.

The Leyen, whose term as German Defence Minister was marked by numerous scandals and accusations of corruption, will be allowed to eat in the restaurants on the 13th floor of the Berlaymont building, which are reserved for Commissioners and their guests. According to the commission, there are no additional costs for food and lodging. Libération interprets this statement as meaning that the Commission President would not be charged for actual costs incurred for furniture, bed linen and the like.

Obvious scaremongering by the trade associations

Home /EU-No-Newsletter, News/Obvious scaremongering by trade associations

EU-No-Newsletter, News | 30 January 2020

A recent article in the NZZ shows that many actors, organisations and associations in Switzerland like to stir up fear in connection with the Framework Agreement, although there is no objective justification for this. In this way they hope to be able to urge the people to join the EU. It can be assumed, however, that not only the medtech industry, but also all other branches of the economy will be able to do very good business in the EU countries in their day-to-day business even without the Framework Agreement. That is why it is important to look closely.

For a long time the argument was circulating in Switzerland that the Swiss medtech industry would no longer be able to export to the EU with the possible bursting of the framework agreement. The Swiss Medtech Association also threatened this scenario in a letter. From 26 May 2020, the industry would only have third country status. This would be devastating for an industry with an export share of up to 70 percent, according to the fear-mongering. Currently, relations with the European Union (EU) are clearly regulated by the Mutual Recognition Agreement (MRA). The agreement gives Swiss medtech companies in the EU the same access as their competitors from the EU area. The same also applies to EU companies for Switzerland. But you have to take a closer look now and the Neue Zürcher Zeitung (NZZ) recently did this in an interesting article. Even if Swiss companies fall back to the level of third countries, access to the European market is still guaranteed. The fact is that Swiss medtech companies are already certified by EU approval bodies. The requirements are the same as in Switzerland. This enables them to resell their products on the European market without any hurdles. This does not require an expensive and damaging framework agreement with the EU.

Dominik Ellenrieder has confirmed this in the said article. He is a well-connected expert in the industry. He has held leading positions in medtech companies, is now on boards of directors and is a partner in the Geneva-based private equity firm Endeavour Vision. These companies operate the largest medtech fund in Europe. He told NZZ that we can continue to do business like this for years to come. The necessary adjustments are manageable, he said, provided the companies have their own subsidiary in an EU country.

Since the introduction of the new medical device regulation in 2017 in the EU, the flood of regulations has increased massively one way or another. Companies have to spend a lot of money and adapt their business processes to comply with the tightened regulations. This shows much more that EU regulations are the main problem for companies, not the lack of a framework agreement. Rather, it proves that with the Framework Agreement we can expect a flood of regulation because we would then have to adopt EU law automatically.

The article in the NZZ nicely shows that many actors, organisations and associations in Switzerland like to stir up fear, although there are no objective reasons for this. In this way they hope to be able to push the population towards a harmful framework agreement. It can be assumed that not only the medtech industry, but also all other sectors of the economy will be able to do business very well in the EU countries in everyday business life even without a framework agreement. That is why it is important to look closely at what is really at stake.

Facts about Medtech and framework agreements at a glance:

It concerns 1 out of 20 areas of the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade (TBR). These do not concern, for example, pharmaceutical products.

- Companies with high quality products and an innovative edge have no problems with this question.
- If we get worse in terms of innovation because of the adoption of EU regulations and bureaucratic obstacles, and because the framework conditions are no longer better than abroad as a result of framework agreements, this is also a major step backwards for the medtech industry.
- Swiss companies can still have their products certified by an EU certification body in an EU country. These tests are already carried out in Germany in many areas. The industry could set up a trustee office in an EU country to carry out the certification from there. This way the product only has to be certified once.
- The medical technology industry, Swiss Medtech, has worked out further possible countermeasures. For example, the acceptance of American certificates (FDA) would mean that the EU pressure tests would come to nothing.
- In the discussion, import and export are confused. The only problem is exports. Therefore, reports of delivery problems to Switzerland in connection with the Framework Agreement must be declared as false declarations.
- The EU also has an interest in not allowing any disturbances in this market, because Swiss companies and products are also indispensable for the EU area.

- The companies which, according to their own statements, have cut jobs or relocated abroad due to the lack of a framework agreement were already in a poor state before. The framework agreement is only cited as a reason.
- The media discussion is very one-sided, with individual voices from the industry already having a ready-made political opinion. Companies that see no problems rarely get a chance to speak.

Congratulations to the British for the brexite

Sunday, 2 February 2020 , from Freeman at 09:00

Applause, since midnight on 31 January 2020, Great Britain is no longer a member of the European Union. Hooray, the British are finally free again from the EU dictatorship in Brussels that has ruled the island since 1975.

It took four attempts to do so, because the British establishment IGNORIZED the result of the referendum of 23 June 2016 and thus the popular will to leave the EU with almost 52 percent. Parties, politicians, the media, business and numerous celebrities did everything possible to prevent the brexite. Worst of all was the propaganda channel BBC, the Brexit-Bashing-Corporation, the mega-medium financed with coercive money, which for four years without ceasing to rush against the brexite and produced permanent advertising for its whereabouts. But the British did not change their mind and remained steadfast.

Horror pictures were painted on the wall, without EU Britain would fall into chaos and perish, because the negative propaganda campaign was enormous. In principle, the optimism of the majority of ordinary Britons, who are able to make it in sovereignty even without the EU, has won over the pessimism of the traitorous elite. My compliments to the British on their courage and will to freedom, and I hope that the brexite will serve as an example for other countries to follow in leaving this undemocratic prison. The message is, do not be afraid, because YES, you can get out if you want and go your own way.

What we can observe in general, the last 10 years has been the decade of the citizens who have increasingly affirmed their will, they are fed up with being ignored, lied to, fooled and mistreated by the political establishment. They want more democracy, they want to have more to say, and they want their opinion to finally count.

It is so obvious that the political caste in the West does not represent the interests of the people and the country in question, but of the banks and financial mafia, the global conglomerates, the militia, secret service and security apparatus, and of course the super rich, who have become even richer.

There are no longer just simple billionaires, not even with double-digit accumulated fortunes, but they have triple-digit billions, just like Jeff Bezos of Amazon, the great slave owner, human abuser and exploiter. Such a blatant difference between the very poor and the astronomically rich has been made possible by completely corrupt politics.

Wherever you look, there is no democratic control or legitimacy in the institutions, because anonymous faceless technocrats, apparatchiks and lobbyists have taken over, especially in Brussels, but nobody can vote for them and nobody can vote against them. They make the laws that the corrupt and cowardly parliamentarians wave through.

Brussels determines and dictates all aspects of life and the economy down to the last corner of the European Union, with arrogance and arrogance, they know better what is good for all EU citizens, because they would be too stupid to decide for themselves. The British have no longer accepted this foreign rule and have freed themselves from it.

The Greeks and Spaniards were governed from Brussels, and now the EUs determine the composition of the Italian government. What the people want and elections play no role at all. With the euro and the ECB, they are in the pincers and can be blackmailed. At least the British have kept their pound.

I know the history of the British Isles quite well, and it can be said that the emancipation and the will to liberate from dictatorship that comes from the European continent goes back at least to Henry VIII, from 1509 to 1547, King of England, and the British have always been an independent and freedom-loving people.

King Henry VIII was tired of foreign rule by the Pope and the Catholic Church in Rome, and he completed the separation of the English Church from Rome and the establishment of the Anglican State Church with the King himself as head, which had far-reaching religious, social and political consequences for the further history of England.

In 1975, the British decided in a referendum with 67 percent in favour of joining the then EEC. They thought why not join the European Economic Community, because cooperation in trade and business with the continent is good for everyone. The rat's tail of ne-gative consequences were kept from them.

Nobody showed them the grand plan that this was only an intermediate step to take away the sovereignty of the member countries and lure them into a dictatorial union governed by unelected officials from Brussels. They have been deceived over the decades and have lost everything that makes a state.

The British have lost control over their own national borders, with the consequence of the unimpeded influx of foreigners and status as equals, to the point of exploiting the social safety net, which is unique with the NHS, free health care for all. Millions have come to the British Isles in social paradise.

Then an EU constitution for a superstate was drafted, which is above the constitutions of individual countries, with its own currency, anthem, flag and government. Now the EU even wants its own army. No one has given their consent to this. The gentlemen in Brussels do what they want.

After the citizens of France and the Netherlands rejected this EU constitution in referendums, Brussels used dirty tricks to rename it the Lisbon Treaty, but with almost the same content. When the people of Ireland also rejected it in a referendum, they had to vote again with massive threats from Brussels and say yes to it. This shows how completely undemocratic the EU is.

The Germans and others were not asked if they wanted to do so anyway, and the member states of the EEC were forced into the European Union, losing all their sovereignty. It took some time for the British to realise that they were being manoeuvred by their politicians into a dictatorship with lies and deception, with very negative consequences.

The greatest traitor to Great Britain was Tony Blair, who transformed the Labour Party from a social democratic party that represented the interests of the working people into one that served the financial criminals and globalists. He was also the one who, together with George W. Bush, made the illegal war of aggression against Iraq possible with lies.

In Germany it happened very similarly with the SPD. Just look at where SPD party leader and Minister of Foreign Affairs and Economics Sigmar Gabriel ended up after he left politics. He has been chairman of Atlantik-Brücke since June 2019 and is a member of the Trilateral Commission and the European Council on Foreign Relations.

On 24 January 2020, Deutsche Bank nominated him for a seat on the supervisory board of its financial institution. The "social" Gabriel is a total traitor to the workers, the taxpayers and Germany in general, as one can only be, and represents the interests of the belligerent American empire, the exploitative globalists and the financial criminals.

Who betrayed us? The Social Democrats!

But he is actually just one of many politicians who don't give a damn about the well-being of Germany and the Germans. The main thing is that they can fill their pockets by selling themselves to foreign gentlemen. In the CDU, FDP and the Greens etc. exactly the same thing, all of them traitors to their country, serving the EU, NATO, Washington and Tel Aviv.

The British have woken up and freed themselves with the brexite ... when will the Germans finally wake up from their deep sleep and lethargy? The French, Italians, Hungarians and others are about to do it. The EU and NATO must finally be dismantled and peaceful cooperation between sovereign European countries must take place again.

The European Union is just a copy of the Soviet Union with a facade that feigns democracy, where an unelected central politburo controls everything and the EU Parliament and the national parliaments are expensive staffages that have nothing to say. The EUDSSR is the UDSSR in version 2.0, that is what Gorbachev and Putin said!

I also congratulate Nigel Farage, who has worked hard for 20 years to free Britain from the clutches of the EU. I wish the British all the best and every success for the future.

Here Farage last speech to the EU Parliament. The President of the Parliament gave him and the other Brian MEPs a good thrashing and turned off the microphone because they were waving flags of their country with joy. A dictatorship!

When I see Ursula von der Leyen as head of the EU, it makes me sick. Who could have voted for this total loser? Nobody!!!

This is my interview with Nigel Farage ten years ago.

Any glue attached to the car - the right peace symbol and/or overpopulation symbol - helps to get rid of the false peace symbol/rune of death and to spread the right symbol, as well as to wake people up and make them aware of the rampant, world-destroying overpopulation.

(wrong peace symbol ☹ = Celtic death rune (turned down "life rune") ☹)

The symbol of peace

The false symbol of peace - the so-called <rune of death>, which is spread worldwide today and which originates from the Celtic Futhark runes resp. is the actual epitome of negative influences and creates destructive vibrations regarding discord, feuds and hatred, revenge, vice, addictions and bondage, because the <death rune> means for many people reminiscences of the NACI times, of death and ruin, but also ambitions regarding wars, terror, destruction of many human achievements and all necessary foundations of life of any kind as well as worldwide discord. Therefore it is urgently necessary that the <rune of death> as a false peace symbol, which creates discord and unrest, disappears completely from the earthly world and thus the ancient as well as true peace symbol is spread all over the earth and made world-famous, whose central elements reflect peace, freedom, harmony, strengthening of the life force, protection, growth and wisdom, have a constructive effect and help very calming and peaceful-positive vibrations to break through, which can effectively convey peace, freedom and harmony! We therefore call upon all FIGU members, all FIGU interest groups, study groups and national groups, as well as all reasonable and honest people striving for peace, freedom, harmony, justice, knowledge and evolution, to do their best to spread the right symbol of peace worldwide and to raise awareness of the dangerous and destructive use of the <rune of death>, which in memory of the NACI crimes is collectively used as a symbol of peace, freedom, harmony, justice, knowledge and evolution.

Man of the Earth, remember: Through weapons, military, wars, terror, hatred, delusion and violence, as well as through fraud, deception, lies, slander and the greed for power of unrighteous, irrational, selfish rulers and criminals, discord, misery, need, death, destruction, annihilation and ruin have been spread on Earth since time immemorial. follow indoctrination and bondage to their violent, rulers or heads of state or emperors of both sexes and thus helped to promote all malicious mischief inexorably.

Man of the Earth: Peace, freedom, harmony and righteousness can never come about through weapons, military, wars, terror, hatred, delusion and other foolishness, but only through the use of reason, reason, communication, consensus, humanity and love. Therefore, human being, you as an individual pay attention to this and try to understand it and only after these high values to act so that all strife, malice and death will be resolved.

Peace

True peace on earth among the world's population can only be achieved when every reasonable and sensible human being finally takes the first non-violent step towards it, and then, in peaceableness, takes every further step, deliberately and consciously, until the last consequence of becoming peaceful is achieved.
